1973 . . . A Year to Remember

Dr. Hugh Kariger

With many years of experience as a teacher and principal, Dr. Hugh Kariger is well qualified to make decisions necessary for administering a large school. Since Portage opened, Dr. Kariger has done a fine job of making this a school that students, faculty, and he can be proud of.

Mrs. Scott finds the bookwork never ends

Portage ... The place to be happy ... or mad ... or sad .

To learn ... think ... grow ... to be together ... or alone ...

The place to win ... or lose ... to pass ... or fail ...

To be proud of yourself ... or to hate yourself ... To have fun in gym ... to suffer through math class ...

To get renamed by the computer ... or to get programmed the wrong way ...

To blow your horn in music or to sketch people in art ...

To learn to be organized \dots or to become firmly entrenched as a pack rat \dots

To do a successful experiment \dots or to cause a fire \dots

To groan in the morning and scream with joy in the afternoon

To read a school newspaper ... or a yearbook

Conferences play an important part in Portage routine. Mr. Middleton and Mrs. Murtaugh check with Mr. Schaffer on class activities.

Floyd Middleton

Floyd Middleton, assistant principal, acts as Dr. Kariger's righthand man. Working together as a team, they have made Portage one of the best junior high schools in the city. Mr. Middleton also has teaching experience, part of it in a Portage classroom.

Portage has its share of trophies too

School lunches aren't exactly one of the top ten best sellers, but they rate far above the usual idea. In case no one noticed Danny Hermes hopping from table to table begging for someone's chocolate chip cookie or garlic bread, maybe you'll remember tenderbreaded loins, hot beef and noodles, and burning chili which were included in menu. If not, simply dust off your Daniel Boone lunch pail.

On a good day, the custodians would find a juicy note, or maybe a full pack of Wrigley's gum. But then of course, on a bad day two fountains would be clogged with gum, the girls' bathroom would be ceiling covered with toilet paper, and none of the chalkboards would have "SAVE" written on them.

How-

English Teachers See That Students

Mrs. Heins presides over a reading assignment

The seventh graders in developmental reading worked in the SRA labs, and struggled to get their book reports in on time. Meanwhile, English classes filled in the gap with grammer and spelling lessons. The eighth graders read BAN-NER IN THE SKY in English classes and, although they mainly concentrated on reading, did find time to fit in a bit of spelling and grammer. The spelling contest also came in for work, with all seventh and eighth graders participating.

Learn in Spite of Themselves

The Portage freshmen this year started out their English classes with their noses in several novels and short stories, as well as the play "Requiem for a Heavyweight." They enjoyed a month or two of grammar (enjoyed?), by memorizing N-V-N-N patterns, predicates, usage and irregular verbs, taking time out for the Lions Club speech contest and several essays.

But the teachers, for once, didn't put much pressure on the spelling part of language arts class, leaving more room for compositions (cough-wheeze).

Neal McKeeman

David Desper

As you probably noticed, McKeeman floated from class to class this year. Why? So that Portage might have a math lab! What's a math lab? A room where you mix numbers and invent magic solutions? Well, not really. It's 151, a puzzle solving, geometric figure making, game doing lab. Kids could get out of classes and study hall to go down to the math lab and actually have fun doing math! Anything that makes math fun has got to be good. And the math lab certainly was.

Cadet Choir is basically a prep course for Varsity Choir. It consists of Baby Rams interested in a combination of general music and a lot of singing. These poor tortured Baby Rams must spent a part of every music hour copying notes for music notebooks. Then, if time permits, they practice for such things as the Christmas program and spring concert.

The second step in the ladder of their musical training lands on Varsity Choir for eighth graders. With their seventh grade year of experience under their sleeves, they proceed with their songs, films, work toward their final year as ninth graders. A couple of examples of what these busy middlemen have been doing are visiting the feeder schools and participating in the Christmas program and spring concert.

ther Sing Together...

May-me-ma-mo-mooo . . . Do-re-mi-fa-so-la 1-3-5-3-1 . . .

What's this?????

Seventh and eighth grade warm-up! For all those talented Streisands who had the gift of song, there was the supreme test: NISBOVA solos and ensembles. These people practiced their pieces diligently (especially the day before contest) and when D-day arrived, they were ready to sing their way into the judges' hearts for a superior rating and a gold medal.

Swing Choir could be described as the pick of the bunch or the best of the choir ... but however you describe it, they were comin' on strong. Such songs as "Charades" and "Where Is Love" were performed with great success. Mrs. Meese's small group blossomed from a tangled melange of eighth grade boys and girls into a swingin' Swing Choir.

Mildred Meese

Swing Choir was made up of select members of Varsity Choir.

Play Together . . . Work To

Ninth grade varsity choir is the third and final step on the vocal music ladder at Portage. These musically inclined people were kept pretty busy this year, practicing for the Christmas, patriotic, and spring programs. They also visited the feeder schools, Nebraska, Lindley, Anthony Wayne, Price, and Study.

Officers this year were Jon Gordy, president; Julie Morken and Lonna Slatton, secretaries; Dave Richey, Janet Gillie, Selma Vaughn, and Kevin Jellison, librarians.

When it comes to blowing their own horns, the eighth and ninth graders are pretty good. But then when it comes to combining all of the various sounds, these kids really know how to get it together. The Varsity Concert Band didn't do much concertizing, yet they filled up the gap with playing and challenging those in first chair.

gether . . . to make . . .

John Broom

Unlike the Varsity Orchestra, the Cadet Orchestra consists solely of strings. This group of fiddlers may not have had a roof, but they had an hour in which to learn how to pluck a perfect plunker and bow a better bass.

Consisting entirely of brass, woodwind, and percussion, these musicians played at several locations around town. including several ninth grade games.

Ninth grade vocalists banded together for ensemble work during weekly sessions.

During contest time, there were a few brave souls who timidly entered the NISBOVA judge's room and performed a solo that could be heard occasionally between the chattering of their teeth and the shaking of their knees.

A Perfect Music Department

Varsity Orchestra features eighth and ninth grade string players along with the best of the winds and percussion — and their sound is the best too.

By combining the squeak of the violin, the blare of the trumpet, the squawk of the clarinets, and the shrill the piccolo. Parlette somehow Mr came out with a number one orchestra. It didn't come without problems. however. Half of the time. Mr. Parlette was trying to shut the trumpets up (an impossible task), Also. lubricating keys, softening reeds, and raising stands took up the period's time. But by some miracle, they got in a minute or two of practice and obviously that did it!

What group of kids search the music folders for a suitable arrangement? Which students stay after school, missing the bus and supper, to practice? How many people blow out their brains 24 hours a day playing their music over and over again? Who pull out their hair before contest day, then end up with a gold medal to show off? What musicians would go through all this? The ensemble contestants would!

NISBOVA competition gives wind ensembles a chance to test their skill in performance

Suite Sixteen makes its Portage debut

Suite Sixteen is an all-string group made up of nine violins, two violas, four cellos, and one string bass. On certain days, these string musicians lugged their stands, chairs, and music to Mr. Werking's room to practice their pieces. The idea was taken from a similar string group that performs in Minneapolis. Most of Suite Sixteen's music comes from pieces that this group plays. They performed at the spring concert and also at NISBOVA.

The freshman team won its first individual football title in 13 years, repeating the title of last year's co-champion by winning six games without a loss. The team was built around a strong defense that allowed only 18 points all season, with an average of only three points per game. The most exciting highlights were the game with Miami, in which they clinched the south division for Portage, and the city championship game, the action was never dull in the rain.

The eighth grade had the most successful season of all, with no defeats. In the final game of the city tourney, an easy first half and a struggling second half against Geyer proved that they were the champs.

The ninth grade record doesn't appear to look like a successful one but 4 wins to 8 losses is much better than a single victory from last year's season.

The seventh graders had a successful season too. Baby Rams compiled a record of 4-1 and their only loss came from Miami.

If you got to thinking that cheerleading seems like a status symbol more than anything else. you probably didn't stay after school to witness their practice session. You didn't attend every single basketball and football game. You didn't spend that time thinking up cheers, remembering chants, screaming out "Sink it, Terry, sink it!" or "Jump, jump, sky high, tip it to a Portage guy," and hoping that the band starts the school song on a low note. You hadn't spent one or two days out of a week in a hot sticky sweater, and hoping that people realized that those were bloomers you were wearing. So next time a cheerleader starts a chant, join in. They deserve

When the hot election in October cooled off and the smoke and steam floated away, it left sitting in the president's chair Leslie Novitsky, a very surprised and happy winner, and his "sidekick," Ted Chase. However, the average person doesn't know very much about the Student Council other than Mr. Middleton's rare announcement, "There will be a Student Council meeting at 2:17 today." What did they do in those meetings? Well, for instance, T-shirts. school spirit, the school constitution, and the candy sale were some of the topics taken into consideration at those "come as you are" get-togethers. They had to form a committee for the candy sale, a committee in charge of the Christmas tree. a committee selecting the Portage shirts, and even a committee to choose committees. There was a lot to be done, and not much time to do it in. But evidently, by the looks of things, they did a bang-up job of getting everything in.

Students may have wondered how the Portage PACKET ever got put together. Sarah editor-in-chief. spent much time writing editorials, laying out pages, and generally trying to control the mass confusion that beset the cast of journalists the day before deadline. She was assisted by Barb Harman, news editor, feature editor Nancy Beadie, and sports editor Ted Chase, And Portage always saw a bunch of proud kids when the PACKET went out. It was no miracle ... just WORKI

Another group which had to pull out their hair to meet deadlines was the yearbook kids. They started the year as happy, normal students and came out as nervous, frenzied people with copy, headlines, pictures, and layouts running in and out of their heads. One hour wasn't enough so they came in after school, weekends, and holidays. But was it worth it? You can bet your PORTARAMA it was!

Most of the future members of the PACKET staff and PORTARAMA staff emerged from this year's Journalism Club. Students in this club cropped pictures. counted headlines, wrote copy for newspaper and vearbook, and in general. "learned the trade" of publications. Cub photographers were also instructed on how to take a picture without dropping the camera.

"King Me!" "Checkmate!" "Watch the Wood Lathe!"

ties were many, but a lot of people had fun ...

in After-School Athletics

Eighth graders get a kickball workout.

Seventh, eighth, and grade boys worked out in two separate intramurals groups. They formed basketball, baseball, football, volleyball, and field hockey teams for competition. In addition, they worked out on the horse and even parallel bars, performing different routines from the girls. They also wrestled and practiced rope climbing. They came in looking like Clark Kent and left looking like

It's not too tough to direct the activity - right, Mr.

Which way's up? Wrestlers get confused.

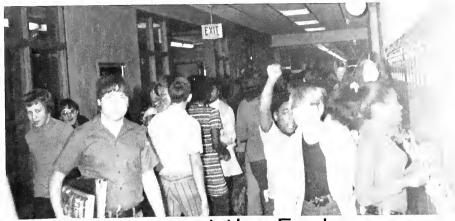

Calisthenics stretch reluctant muscles.

Eighth and ninth grade boys, directed by Mr. Denny and Mr. McKeeman, released their energy every Wednesday in intramurals.

In the Beginning

at the End

Past...Ahead...

To a seventh grader: past... coming to new school... taking new subjects...learning to get along with

Ahead: two more years at Portage...looking forward to not being a Baby Ram...

To an eighth grader: past...having been a Ram for two years...spending time with friends...learning new things...

Ahead: first year of high school...choosing subjects... collecting bugs...thinking of Elmhurst...

To a ningh grader: past...three years in Ram land... collecting bugs (yuk!)...memorable sports seasons ...strange times...happy times...

Ahead: Elmhurst...meeting people...growing up...
remembering Portage...
